Compassion.
Through rushing leaves the sun
falls down.
And spread its gold across the ground.
The violets through the leafy peep through
And flick the earth with spots of blue.
The murmuring brook makes my sight.
And violets parody your eyes.
Beside the rippling river's brink
The white-capped lilies bend to drink.
Each perfect, jolly, lithe, and
In just a cup of water to hold.
The diamond dew, but glittering through small petals.
They are but mockery to your smiles.

An artist's sleep, with love in tone,
Sounding sweetly through the dusk, in June.
But 'tis a pleasure swiftly passed
For none and the heart is sad.
You speak, and sweet fingers touch
the skin,
My heart in rapture thrills and shivers.

—Clipped.
